

Chapter 5

Conclusion

This report provides information on how to identify fracture critical members in steel bridges. In addition, this report also provides guidance for effective inspection and evaluation of the fracture critical members. The engineering critical assessment procedure presented in this report can be applied to assess the overall condition of a bridge and its fitness-for-service. Appropriate application of these procedures can assure public safety of in-service bridges.